Subject: Internal Assessment on the SORA Operation

Date: 14 January 2026

Distribution: President's Office / Minister of National Defense / Intelligence Directorate

Classification: TOP SECRET

1. Purpose of This Report

This document records the internal rationale, planning, execution framework, and narrative management strategy regarding the SORA operation.

The contents herein differ materially from publicly stated positions and are intended solely for internal reference, accountability, and contingency planning.

External disclosure is strictly prohibited.

2. Strategic Background

At the time of planning, the Republic of Poland was facing a significant fiscal deficit.

Securing immediate financial resources was deemed a national priority.

Internal discussions identified SORA City—then a high-population city affiliated with the USSR entity—as a viable asset for monetization.

Accordingly, a plan was developed to secure control over SORA City and subsequently transfer it to the People's Republic of China through sale.

3. Operational Planning

To execute the SORA operation, a special operations unit was convened.

Planning and coordination were conducted with the cooperation of national intelligence agencies, and multiple closed-door meetings were held.

The operation prioritized administrative control and deception over overt force, with the objective of minimizing resistance and external scrutiny.

4. Operational Methodology

The agreed operational sequence was as follows:

- Present SORA City with a proposal involving substantial Polish investment.
- Require, as a condition, the temporary transfer of mayoral authority (Towny administrative control) to the Polish side.
- Upon receipt of mayoral authority, immediately consolidate full administrative control.
- No actual large-scale investment was planned or executed.
- Following occupation, SORA City would be sold to China.

This approach was assessed internally as the most efficient method to achieve control without prolonged conflict.

5. Final Objective

Once mayoral authority was obtained, the operation required no further escalation.

The subsequent sale of SORA City to China fulfilled the original objective of short-term fiscal stabilization.

6. External Narrative Management (Official Justification)

In order to avoid international criticism and diplomatic backlash, a specific external narrative is to be consistently employed as the official justification for the SORA operation.

The public position shall assert that, in April 2025, the Republic of Poland and UMI concluded a formal status agreement under which Poland conducted substantial investment in exchange for placing UMI City under Polish administration.

On April 12, UMI unilaterally violated this agreement by declaring independence, despite the agreement explicitly defining such action as a major breach.

As UMI's independence is therefore to be treated as null and void, any state entity subsequently established on that basis—namely the USSR—is likewise to be regarded as lacking legitimacy.

Accordingly, cities affiliated with or later joining the USSR, including SORA City, are to be presented as falling within the scope of Poland's legitimate administrative authority.

All actions concerning SORA City are to be framed not as acts of aggression or expansion, but as measures undertaken to restore Poland's rights and governance authority infringed upon by UMI's treaty violation.

This narrative is to be maintained as a diplomatic construct, intentionally detached from the actual economic motivations of the operation, and used exclusively to mitigate international criticism and preserve outward legitimacy.

7. Internal Assessment

From an internal standpoint, the SORA operation was driven primarily by economic necessity rather than ideological or security imperatives.

While effective in achieving short-term financial objectives, the operation carries substantial long-term reputational and diplomatic risks should this internal rationale be exposed.
